

Incremental processing of negation: What can be learned from ERPs?

Mante Nieuwland
MPI Nijmegen

A great deal of research on negation has investigated whether negation is always processed in two steps, an affirmative first step followed by a second step wherein negation is applied. In my talk, I will cover older and more recent studies using event-related potentials (ERPs) on this issue. The results from these studies highlight the important influence of context on the processing profile of negation.